

SOCIETY and PERSONAL ACTIVITIES of WOMEN

SOCIETY

The marriage of Miss Andrea Smith, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Smith, of Granger, Ind., and Abner Kelsey, son of Mr. John Voorhes, of Buchanan, Mich., took place Sunday afternoon at 2 o'clock at the home of the bride's parents, Rev. J. J. Carey officiating in the presence of 75 guests. The couple were attended by Mr. and Mrs. Oliver Jeffries of this city.

The bride wore a becoming gown of grey tulle and her bouquet was of white roses. Mrs. Jeffries wore a gown of blue and she carried pink roses. Following the ceremony a wedding dinner was served. The decorations of the table and throughout the home were autumn flowers.

Mr. and Mrs. Kelsey will reside on a farm near Buchanan. The guests included Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Carson and Mr. and Mrs. John Luckey, of South Bend.

Final arrangements have been completed for the annual state day luncheon of the South Bend Woman's club, which will be held Saturday at 12:30 in the Rotary room of the Oliver hotel. Officers of the county and state 13th district will be guests, and all members of any federated club are invited to attend. The after-noon speaker will be Elias Day, master characterist, who has a reputation as a finished interpreter of human nature. The committee in charge of the affair include Mrs. C. E. Francis, chairman of decorations, who will be assisted by Mrs. R. M. Hutchinson and Mrs. John Moore; Mrs. George Thurn, chairman of menu committee, whose assistants will be Mrs. Harry Schadt and Mrs. R. R. Stewart. UNCLE WIGGILY

—IO:—

The Story of Curley's Sled

—IO:—

By HOWARD R. GARIS

"Uncle Wiggily!" called Nurse

Jane Fuzzy Wuzzy one morning as she beat up the eggs for his breakfast omelet, "when you are skipping around today looking for adventures will you please go to the eight and nine cent store and get me some candles?"

"Surely, I'll do that for you, Miss Fuzzy Wuzzy," answered the bunny rabbit gentleman, as he sprinkled some powdered sugar over his turpish toast. "But why do you want candles? Are you going to make a pumpkin Jack O'Lantern for Halloween?"

"Not exactly," laughed the muskrat lady housekeeper. "But it is a good thing to have candles in the bungalow in case the lamps go out."

"Why, where would the lamps go if they do go out?" asked Uncle Wiggily, twinkling his pink nose, as he always did when he tried to be funny. "Would they go to the movies, do you think, Nurse Jane?"

"Oh, how should I know?" exclaimed Miss Fuzzy Wuzzy. "All I want is for you to bring me some candles."

"And I'll do it," promised Mr. Longears as he hopped away on his red, white and blue striped barber pole rheumatism crutch.

He was almost at the candle store, and he was thinking of Christmas trees and New Year bushes when, all of a sudden, he heard a sad voice saying:

"Oh, dear! It will never go again, and I can't have any fun! Oh, dear! It's broken—it won't go any more."

"Dear me! That sounds like trouble," said Uncle Wiggily to himself. "Maybe some little animal girl's walking doll is broken, or some small animal boy's toy fire engine is smashed. I'll see if I can help them."

Peeking over the top of the bushes the bunny gentleman saw Curly Twiggily, the little piglet boy, and Curly had with him a sliding down hill sled.

"What's the matter, Curly?" asked Uncle Wiggily, hopping over to the little pig chap.

"Oh my sled is broken and I can't ride on it any more," squalled Curly. "It will soon be winter, with snow and ice on the hills, and I can't have any fun because my sled will not ride me."

"Perhaps I can fix it," said kind Uncle Wiggily. And when he had looked at the sled he saw that one runner was broken. "I can easily mend this," said the rabbit. "Wait until I go to the store and get Nurse Jane's candles, and then I'll fix your sled."

"Oh joy and happiness!" squalled Curly, as he skipped along after Uncle Wiggily, dragging the broken sled behind him. The piglet boy had taken his sled out of the wood-house that morning, only to find his coaster broken. At first he was sad but now he was happy.

It did not take Uncle Wiggily long, after he had bought the candles for the muskrat lady, to mend the broken sled. Gnawing, with his sharp teeth, a piece of wood off a tree, the bunny gentleman fastened it on the sled, soon it was almost as good as before.

"Talk about fun! I'm going to have some too!" suddenly cried a harsh voice. "I'm going to have fun taking Uncle Wiggily off to my den and nibbling his ears! Wool Wool!"

"I think we'd better be going Curly," said the bunny rabbit, as looking at the words, having no ears to nibble the bad old Bushy Bear.

"Oh ho! Oh ho!" howled the Bushy Bear. "You may go but you can't get away from me!" And with that he began to chase Uncle Wiggily and the little piglet boy faster and faster ran Curly and the bunny gentleman, dragging the mended sled after them, but faster and faster on came the bear.

At last Uncle Wiggily and Curly reached the top of a grass covered hill. The bear was almost up to them.

"Oh!" squalled Curly. "If it was only winter and if there was snow on this hill we could get on my sled and get away from the bear. But there is no snow and we can't slide!"

"Yes, we can!" cried Uncle Wiggily. "Quick, Curly, take one of these candles and rub it on the runners of your sled. I'll do the same on this side. The candles will make the steel runners so slippery that they'll slide down on the dry grass just as on snow. Quick!"

Quickly the bunny and piglet rubbed candles on the sled. Then they turned it over, sat down on it, pushed themselves down the grass hill and away they went whizzing, just as the bear came racing down.

"I'll get you!" cried the bear. But did he? Indeed not. The greasy sled went so fast on the slippery grass hill, even though there was no snow, that the old bear couldn't catch up. He slipped and stumbled and fell down and bumped his nose. But Uncle Wiggily and Curly kept safely on, reaching the bottom of the hill, and weren't harmed a bit.

The bear limped back to his den in the woods, having no ears to nibble that day, and how glad Uncle Wiggily was he had fixed Curly's sled!

So everything happened for the best, you see, and if the firecracker doesn't try to put a Fourth of July paper cap on the head of cabbage, I'll tell you next about Uncle Wiggily and the toothbrush.

As the full beauty of this announcement dawned upon Jones and Ted I saw a look of intense gratification flash over the chauffeur's face, which he bent his head quickly to hide. But the young son of the automobile owner, who was standing beside his father, bent almost double in laughter which he evidently had much trouble to keep inaudible. He was evidently enjoying to the utmost this fruition of Lillian's suggestion that to be put in a corner like a child would be a most salutary lesson to his father. I knew, of course, that Lillian had no actual knowledge of anything contraband in the big car, but I also had observed her deductive processes so long that I felt I could follow them quite accurately in the present case.

The owner of the big car belonged to the arrogant type of wealth which believes the laws are made to be obeyed by persons less fortunate than they, and that they themselves are above the necessity of paying any attention to legal restrictions or the most fundamental principles of good breeding. His ruddy, almost apoplectic face showed his indulgence in the best of food and liquors. That such a man would consider it only a joke to transport liquor from one place to another in defiance of the law was almost a foregone conclusion.

That Lillian had no intention of carrying her little stage play to its conclusion was almost as sure as I was that she had told the motorcycle officer not to carry out her orders to their logical end. But he gave no indication of anything but a sense of outraged law as he turned to the older man, whose arrogant air had been stripped from him neatly as a ripe tomato is skinned when dropped into boiling water.

"Why! Why!" he stammered. "I have nothing whatever in my car that does not belong there." Lillian looked at him levelly.

"You are not quite so sure of that little fact as you were of my law-breaking a few minutes ago, are you?" she asked crisply.

Revelations of A Wife

By ADELE GARRISON

I have sat through many plays where I experienced a far less distinct dramatic thrill than I did when Lillian so quietly yet effectively held toward the young motorcycle officer the tiny badge and card which she had taken from her dress. I knew, of course, what they were—the credentials identifying her as an important member of the diplomatic secret service, which she always carries, but which she does not use unless she deems it absolutely necessary.

The eyes of the young officer rounded and widened until I wondered if he would be able to keep them in their sockets. He flushed a brick-red, and evidently casting about widely for some action to show her his recognition of her rank, he saw the apology for the annoyance to which she had been subjected, he put his hand to his cap in a military salute.

"I thought I told you—"

I looked quickly at the three men who were spectators of the little scene. On the faces of Jones, the chauffeur, and Ted, the son of the owner, there was mirrored intense interest, a great deal of amusement, but no particular surprise. I decided that while they could not have known the particular nature of the disclosure which Lillian had intended to minister to the man who had agrieved her, yet they had anticipated from her manner something surprising and humiliating.

The pompous owner of the automobile looked more apoplectic than ever as he saw the action of the young motorcycle officer. He strode toward us, his nostrils wrathfully opening and closing as he saw the sign of a stranded fish move.

"Why does this nonsense mean?" he snarled. "I thought I told you—"

Lillian said something to the young officer—which I could not catch. He nodded comprehendingly, then turned with an air of assurance to the older man. I think he had been secretly humiliated by the way the other man had treated him, though overawed by his knowledge of the pompous man's wealth and power, and was not sorry to retaliate.

Methodist Episcopalians of State Arrange for Three-Day Convocation

The Methodist Episcopalians of Indiana with gather for a three-day convocation in Indiana on the 28th, 29th and 30th of November. It is announced by Bishop F. D. Leets of the Indiana area.

On the first day, lay and ministerial delegates to the state council will meet in executive session. At this time matters of vital interest to the development of the church life of the state will be decided. The hospitals, colleges, orphanages and Wesley foundations for religious instruction at the state universities will be represented before the council. On the second day, all the ministers of the Indiana, North Indiana and Northwest Indiana conferences will meet with the council. This meeting will be observed as a retreat in preparation for a vigorous campaign of evangelism effort throughout the entire state.

On the third day, the ministers and members of the council will be joined by four lay delegates, elected from every Methodist Episcopal church and chapel in the state. The DePaul university choir, directed by Dean Robert G. McCutchan of Greencastle, will sing. Dr. B. M. Tipton of Rome, Ind.; Bishop Leets, who has just returned from the Episcopal conference at London and will be seated by districts and headed by the superintendents as follows: W. E. McKensie, South Bend district, South Bend; F. K. Dougherty, Lafayette district, Lafayette; U. G. Leazenby, Crawfordsville district, Crawfordsville; H. L. Davis, Greencastle district, Greencastle; W. H. Wylie, Bloomington district, Bloomington; J. F. O'Haver, Vincennes district, Vincennes; J. S. Ward, Evansville district, Evansville; M. A. Farr, New Albany district, New Albany; L. T. Freeland, Seymour district, Seymour; C. E. Bacon, Indianapolis district, Indianapolis; W. M. Whitsett, Greensburg district, Greensburg; J. M. Walker, Connorsville district, Rushville; Somerville Light, Richmond district, Richmond; A. A. Beatty, Muncie district, Muncie; F. A. Hall, Logansport district, Kokomo; W. B. Freeland, Wabash district, Wabash; W. W. Martin, Ft. Wayne district, Ft. Wayne; A. G. Neal, Goshen district, Warrick.

Wide interest is being shown in the state gathering and each district is expecting to show up in full force before the state convocation.

ADVICE TO GIRLS

By Annie Laurie

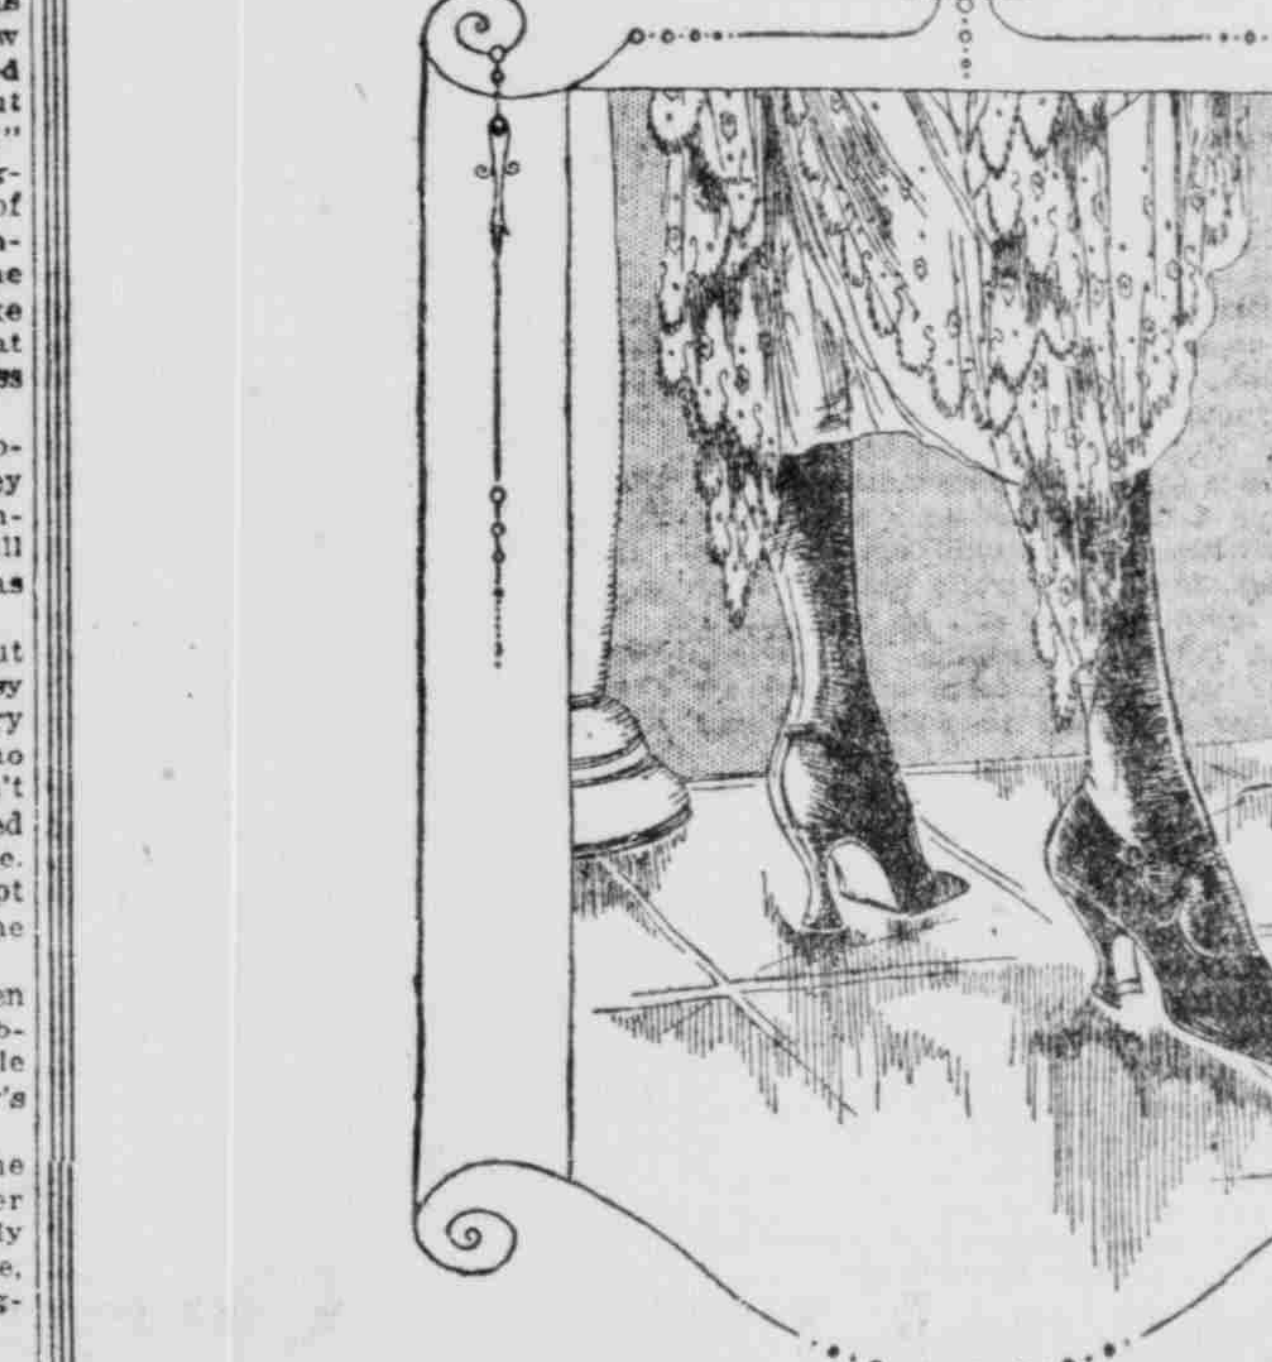

DEAR ANNIE LAURIE: I am a girl, 19 years old. I love a young man, 23 years of age, more than I could begin to express and at times am almost desperate.

About a year ago he told me there was another girl he loved, yet he kept on going with me and said he couldn't give up my friendship, also that he loves me and wants me to be as near and dear to him as possible. He encourages my love and never misses seeing me every Sunday.

I am a working girl and if I were to lose him it would break my heart. Do you think I should get a clearer view of the situation than I seem to have at present?

TERRIBLY WORRIED

TERRIBLY WORRIED: You have only yourself to blame, my dear friend. When the young man told you he loved another girl, you should have given him up then. He has no right to encourage your love, and you should have more pride than to accept his so-called friendship when you know he loves someone else.
